People are emotionally connected. It appears that natural events (earthquakes, dice, etc.) are part of the same picture, which suggests that there is a uniform, physical reason behind all of it, possibly according to my hypotheses.

What will count in the end is whether what I wrote will be confirmed or not. I guess quite a few things will be.

Writing a popular book about my stuff without a scientific basis is not to my taste. Proving that people are emotionally connected seems very difficult, while proving that astrology fits with how people behave seems possible, but very much detailed work. Both require in addition to overcome huge collective resistance.

Small pieces of exact philosophy, general mathematical insights into reading the world's signs are a lot more easy to prove, to convince people of, and also quite useful for many people and thus suitable as a hobby for me with maybe in 10 years or so a beautiful popular, and yet exact, book.

So, stay at the root, don't follow the white rabbits.
