

exactphilosophy.net

avantgarde

In your dreams

Astrologically viewed, my MC is in Aries, roughly conjunct my moon in the 10th house and in the Sabian symbol “An unsuccessful bomb explosion”, suggesting radical new ideas that would, however, fail to ignite, fail to start something in the world, at least in my lifetime. Or so it might appear. . .

I think with the moon at the MC my relation to the public is not via conscious public attention. No, it is via the sea of unconsciousness, fitting also with my Saturn and Chiron near the end of Pisces in the 9th house. Someday someone will wake up having dreamed a fragment of what I wrote, or maybe will even visit this website by “chance”, consciously forget about it and then have the idea resurface again without remembering where it originally came from.

To me personally that would be the best solution, most satisfying also to me. No public attention with all that is usually attached to it, which I would not like, and whoever then “has” the idea is completely free what to do with it. After all, who knows whether I “had” all of these ideas by myself or I just dreamt of someone else’s ideas, a bit like in that short story by Jorge Luis Borges. Thanks to Alexandra for bringing this out indirectly 10 Oct 2020.

According to Plato, the world of ideas might even be eternal, always there, and we might only just be able to dream what is already there.

This web site was registered 19 March 2001 at 18:56:24 UTC from Adliswil (Switzerland): AC in the middle of Libra, Venus at the DC, and the MC in Cancer, again ruled by the moon. The constellation Cancer has only faint stars.

But I might still try; got to do a little bit of something in your life. Aeon Flux: “Learn from you mistakes, so that one day you can repeat them precisely.” Maybe even add a tiny twist, like what TGM said about the poetry of life? 🦋